

Aloha Life

By Jason Hiett, Matt Kramer, Keith MacGeagh

COMEDY

Captain Richard Cox of the United States Army wants to do nothing more than enjoy his life in a constant party with his friends in Honolulu. One of his two roommates Pat Randolph is a seven year, still to graduate, student at the University of Hawaii that does tattoo and body piercings. The other, Jay Munoz, is a semi professional surfer with not an ambitious bone in his body. He just loves to be on the beach. Needless to say the three are always looking for a good time.

The only problem is that Cox's commanding officer General Francis Spitzer wants nothing of the sort. After several mistakes and irreverent blunders, Captain Rich will pay the ultimate price. He is forced to baby-sit the twenty one year old daughter of the Taiwanese foreign minister while she cavorts for a week of fun filled activity on the big island with her sorority friends from the University.

After checking in at one of the nicer island hotels with his new assignment, Rich is forced into a myriad of recreational activities aimed at distracting and tiring him out so that Andrea can escape to join her friends un-chaperoned.

During the evening activities at a local nightclub, Andrea makes her move and bolts. Rich is busy entertaining his new friend Janet Traylen, from the hotel front desk, who happens to be at the nightclub.

The next day leads to chaos as Jay and Patrick assist Captain Rich and Janet in their reconnaissance to find the missing Andrea. Pat and Jay get distracted and end up in hot water with some of the local ladies. Later Jay, Patrick and Rich's friend, "Danger Zone", plot to infiltrate the sororities on the campus to rescue Andrea. It's a big job, but someone's got to do it.

In the end, Andrea comes to her senses and returns to Rich's bungalow where the annual 'Get Leid' party is in progress. The General and the foreign minister are none the wiser. Andrea heads back to Taiwan having made some new friends.